Manufactured Good Solution Inexpensive

Who buys or chooses to live in a trailer or mobile home? The question immediately conjures up images of poverty-stricken families and down-on-their-luck types. These outdated stereotypes are being replaced with the facts...one in 16 Americans live in manufactured homes — built in a factory with modern production techniques — and these residents defy all the stereotypes.

Just as the baby boom generation has aged, the average age of the American population has risen. That's true of owners of manufactured homes, too. According to a recent study by Foremost Insurance Co., since 1981 the average age has increased from 46 to 50. One-third of manufactured homeowners, however, are in their 30s and one third 60 or more years old.

Today, more than in past years, there are more managers and professionals choosing to live in manufactured homes. More than one-third have incomes in excess of $30,000. The manufactured homebuyer's median household
